The present invention relates generally to a stand-by generator, and more particularly to a rotary-to-rector generator that reduces the size of the conventional generator for a motor vehicle. The stand-by generator of the type has been used, for example, in a small-sized motor vehicle. The stand-by generator is mounted within the engine compartment of the vehicle and is provided with a housing, which is made of metal. An armature of the generator is mounted within the housing. The conventional stand-by generator of the type has a larger dimension in a lateral direction, because of the metal housing. Therefore, the conventional stand-by generator cannot be made small in size and low in weight, and cannot be made lighter in weight, because of the metal housing. To solve the above problem, it has been proposed to make the generator housing of a synthetic resin, instead of the metal housing. However, the generator housing of the synthetic resin has a smaller rigidity and strength, compared to the metal housing. The housing of the generator made of the synthetic resin has a smaller size for receiving the armature of the generator therein. Therefore, the generator of the synthetic resin cannot be made low in weight. It is an object of the present invention to provide a rotary-to-rector generator which can be made small in size and low in weight, by reducing the 82157476af
